Does Your Child
Sometimes
Seem A Step
Behind?

It's not always easy to tell if a child may be falling behind his or her peers. Many parents recognize differences in their young child, but are unsure if there is genuine reason for concern or where to turn for help. Oftentimes, pediatricians may not have enough time in a brief office visit to properly assess parents' concerns about a child's language, social, motor, or other developmental skills.

Our agency can help by offering concerned parents an in-home developmental assessment for children ages 6 months to 5 years. Once this evaluation is complete, our staff of trained professionals can create a program tailored to your child's specific needs. Our fun, play-based sessions are interactive and family-friendly, conducted in the child's natural home environment with parental participation.

Early intervention ideally begins as soon as there is any suspicion of developmental delay. Left untreated, these delays can prevent a child from keeping up with others of the same age. This can lead to struggles at school and difficulties in socializing with peers. The good news is that with early detection, there is much that can be done to get a child back onto a normal track.

We serve families throughout southern California, including the Greater Los Angeles area, Orange County, the San Fernando Valley, the San Gabriel Valley, the Inland Empire and San Diego County.
